

Copy the Bachelors Use Candlelight

by Count Marco

Hollywood reporter Hedda Hopper mentioned briefly in a recent column that bachelors give better parties than girls.

She remarked about one party she attended, "The candlelight was so soft and flattering, the ladies never looked lovelier."

She then quoted the late, wonderful Ethel Barrymore as saying, "They didn't put those footlights in there for nothing." And bachelors, knowing that all women look more romantic and desirable under candlelight, use it to get up courage enough to give up bachelorhood for you.

Candles are important in the life of every woman. Once you hook him, you should use candles even more to hold onto him than you did before you plunged him into the sea of matrimony.

After all, once you've wedded him, you destroy enough illusions in his outlook without making him think he has a ghoul instead of a girl.

Use the age-old romantic aid; burn them at both ends if necessary, but burn them you must. I have yet to see any woman, irrespective of age, not look livelier, younger and more appetizing in the flicker of candlelight.

However, don't overdo it. I heard recently about one woman in the Santa Monica area who was so overwhelmed by my suggestion about candlelight and wine that she prepared the breakfast table with candlelight.

She was disturbed by her husband's reaction when he staggered into the breakfast room, took one pop-eyed look and snapped, "What the h...s going on here?" And who can blame him? Breakfast is no time for candles, unless he is a night owl and breakfast a midnight affair.

Remember this: A bachelor buys and lights the candles because he wants to frame you properly, as he'd frame any other work of art. But once he's married, he leaves the candle buying up to you.

And don't be disturbed if he pokes fun, is shocked or complains. Time will tell. And the more it begins to tell on your face, the more you need candles.
